ONLINE LIBRARY OF LIBERTY RECEIVES “BEST OF HUMANITIES ON THE WEB” AWARD

Apex CoVantage converted over 500 titles to XML & HTML for OLL web site

HERNDON, VA – November 17, 2005 - The National Endowment for the Humanities has selected the Liberty Fund, Inc.’s Online Library of Liberty (OLL) as one of the best online resources for education in the humanities. Since 2002, Apex has worked with OLL to convert more than 500 classical texts into standardized HTML, making these works readily available to students, academics and scholars on OLL’s web site. The OLL offers classic texts of philosophy, politics, history and literature online and free of charge to the public.

In addition to the award, the OLL Web site will now be included on EDSITEment.com, the National Endowment for the Humanities’ gateway to humanities-related educational content on the Internet.

Dr. David Hart, Director of the Liberty Fund’s Online Library of Liberty, stated, “I am very pleased that the NEH selected the OLL for an award based on intellectual quality, content, design, and classroom impact. We look forward to continuing our work to provide additional titles online.”

Apex created hundreds of these titles for the OLL in PDF and E-Book PDF formats, and keyed and encoded the scanned PDF titles for an XML database repository. Apex’s digital publishing methodology converts the original text into a searchable document, so OLL users can easily navigate the online database. The customized DTD and the publication (archival) XML transforms the text into presentable HTML with hyperlink functionality within the document. Joel Poznansky, President of Apex CoVantage ePublishing, commented, “This project is particularly exciting because Apex was able to provide content that faithfully conveys the original appearance of the books, allowing the reader to fully appreciate each work in its historical context.”
