APEX TO CREATE ELECTRONIC ARCHIVE FOR WOODROW WILSON LIBRARY

Presidential papers to be available online

HERNDON, VA – January 16, 2006 – Apex CoVantage, a leading knowledge process outsourcing company, announced today that they have won a contract to convert the Woodrow Wilson Papers into searchable electronic archives for the Woodrow Wilson Presidential Library (www.woodrowwilson.org).

Joel Poznansky, President of Apex's ePublishing Solutions, remarked, "Converting these historic works to an electronic format will provide access to documented pieces of American history to a much larger audience of students and academics."

According to the Woodrow Wilson Presidential Library's website, "This eLibrary will provide a user-friendly environment in which to explore materials related to Woodrow Wilson, his life, and his legacy." Full-text searchable transcriptions of letters, speeches, notes, and other documents from multiple collections, some never before examined, will be available, as well as scans of original manuscripts, photographs, and film. Extensive electronic mark-up will seamlessly link related materials, provide helpful annotation, and enable detailed searching. The eLibrary will be online in spring 2006.

For Apex, this important project comes on the heels of the company's having been awarded several other prestigious historical archival initiatives, such as The Papers of Thomas Jefferson: Retirement Series for the Robert H. Smith International Center for Jefferson Studies at Monticello. This invaluable resource gives information on tens of thousands of texts owned by more than a thousand repositories and private collectors. In 2005, Apex digitized the papers of George Washington for the University of Virginia.

Apex has the distinguished reputation of producing highly functional, intensely linked and fully indexed publishing products for libraries and universities, including abstracting and indexing, content sourcing, capture and conversion.
